2010 Haiti Response Financial Update

June 2011

Based on current assessments, which may change to best meet the needs of affected communities, the Canadian Red Cross anticipates spending in each response phase as follows:

The emergency phase includes activities that meet basic needs, such as the distribution of relief supplies, clean water, medical care (field hospitals) and emergency shelter materials. Recovery work aims to rebuild damaged and destroyed shelter, water and sanitation systems and social/health systems. Long-term development helps communities become stronger, healthier and more resilient, based on the needs within communities. Phases overlap, particularly in Haiti where emergency activities are ongoing as new crises develop.

Planned spending:

The Canadian Red Cross is committed to supporting communities in the months and years ahead as Haiti recovers and rebuilds. This process is expected to take 10 years.
