These two simple words are, by no means, a new theme for the Canadian Red Cross. They have been, are and will always be at the heart of everything we do. Whether it’s training over a half a million Canadians a year in water safety and first aid, or being a strong anti-bullying advocate supporting youth rallies in Manitoba, or comforting a Quebec family after a devastating house fire, or operating a shelter in BC for evacuees from a forest fire, or staffing a centre loaning medical equipment in New Brunswick, or providing famine relief in the Horn of Africa, the volunteers and staff of the Canadian Red Cross spend each and every day taking care.

“Take care” is also our advice to all Canadians. Acquiring the skills, motivation and commitment to protect yourself, your loved ones, your neighbours and complete strangers can provide lifelong reassurance and, often, make the difference between resilience and tragedy.

In our view, the basis for taking care, the starting point for everything, is the individual and the extent to which a community cares for its members. Community by community, we seek to create strong, resilient and prepared citizens who, collectively, make up equally strong, resilient and prepared towns, cities and countries.

Humanity has yet to figure out how to avoid natural and man-made disasters. But we do know how to prepare for widespread or individual distress and to provide humanitarian relief, comfort and hope. And we do know how to help the vulnerable – regardless of who or where they are. We know how to take care.

In 2012, millions of Canadians and citizens of other countries benefitted from the actions of the Canadian Red Cross. From sending trained volunteers to help people affected by hurricane Sandy, floods in New Brunswick and Thunder Bay, to sending our emergency hospital to help cholera patients in Mozambique or Sierra Leone, our response capability has made a difference to people coping with natural and public health disasters.

Message from the Secretary General

We continue our vital recovery work a year after the devastating wildfires in and around Slave Lake, Alberta, and through the completion of construction of more than 7,500 shelters in Haiti. At the same time, day in and day out, we are providing services and programs which affect lives in quieter but no less important ways. First Aid, CPR, and swimming instruction, home support services, and bullying prevention programs are protecting Canadians across the country while programs such as maternal and child health in Central America and Africa are delivering dramatic results. The ‘Facts at a Glance’ section in this report provides additional tangible evidence of our impact.

In addition to these and many more offerings, we channelled effort last year towards preparedness by sharpening our strategies, concentrating on volunteer engagement and developing more collaborative relationships with communities, other Red Cross partners, corporations and governments.

There may have been no better time for this focus on planning than 2012. Every indication is that our investment in emergency response and community health will be drawn upon to its full extent in the future both domestically and internationally. We have long talked about the growing challenge of urbanization, but usually in the context of the developing world where infrastructure is often fragile. What is starkly evident, however, is that in less than three years we have witnessed four major events that required Red Cross in the developed world to serve people and communities at unprecedented levels – the New Zealand Earthquake, the Australian brush fires, the earthquake and tsunami in Japan and Hurricane Sandy in the United States and Caribbean.
The magnitude of such events means one thing: we have to be ready in ways we had not previously imagined, with techniques and planning and the capacity to mobilize people and resources on a scale we had not experienced. We also have to be ready to deal with events whose duration and effects on people last longer and require more support.

Will any amount of planning truly matter in the face of these natural events, any one of which could have happened in Canada? Unequivocally, the answer is ‘yes’, as we plainly saw in our collective efforts to cope with the effects of Hurricane Sandy, the largest natural disaster in our hemisphere last year which left thousands of people without homes or in dire need of other basic necessities.

In every province, governments are looking for innovative ways to improve delivery of social and health-related services with Canada’s aging population and we are strengthening our capacity to be a solution provider. This past year in Ontario, we launched Red Cross Care Partners, a new corporation which represents a unique model allowing two strong organizations to come together to expand services to the people of Ontario. This, along with the continued growth of our Community Support Services and Health Equipment Loan programs in Ontario, Atlantic Canada and Western Canada, are clear demonstrations of the Canadian Red Cross’s ability to be innovative and adaptable in this fast-paced and ever-changing world.

As we have painfully seen in Syria and in Mali, the nature of armed conflict has become more complex with civilian populations at serious risk. Our fundamental principles of neutrality and impartiality have again proven to often be the difference between life and death as the Red Cross and Red Crescent continue to provide relief and medical care in these areas and numerous other countries. Canadians should be justifiably proud that, through their contributions, they are able to support this necessary and dangerous work.

At home, we will continue to focus on building strategic relationships with individual donors, public authorities and corporations to help ensure we have the resources available to provide the humanitarian assistance which Canadians have come to expect and rely upon.

I am proud to say that Canada’s rank in the global Red Cross Red Crescent Movement continues to strengthen. As one of the top contributing National Societies in the world – both financially and in the number of delegates we send overseas for disaster response and community projects - our expertise is sought for events or situations which demand resourcefulness, courage and plain hard work.

From coast-to-coast-to-coast in Canada and around the world, 2012-2013 saw the Canadian Red Cross grow even stronger, enabled by a truly extraordinary cadre of volunteers and staff and by the equally extraordinary generosity of Canadians.

Take care,

Conrad Sauvé
After my first year as Chair of the Board, I am extremely pleased to see how the Canadian Red Cross is adapting to changes in the domestic and international environments with responses that are innovative, well-reasoned, and carefully planned. Further, I am proud of the role our Board of Directors has played in guiding this deliberate and farsighted approach.

Message from the Chair

Each year, the Board and staff, backstopped by our lengthy history, tradition and experience, go about the important task of enhancing the ways we deliver humanitarian assistance with the goal of achieving routine and continuous improvement. This past year was no exception as we undertook a number of initiatives to support and refine what we do and how we do it.

I am particularly proud of the volunteer engagement survey we conducted last year, both for the extremely high level of response we received and the encouraging results it yielded. For the first time, this detailed, cross-country questionnaire sought to gauge volunteer perceptions, collecting views from almost 3,000 volunteers. This feedback will help us ensure that the Canadian Red Cross is fully capitalizing on the talents and contributions of volunteers in operational and governance roles across Canada and that our processes for identifying, engaging, training, recognizing and retaining volunteers are leading-edge.

The results of this survey and the very constructive commentary we received have set a baseline for how we engage volunteers so that we may track our progress over time through subsequent surveys and adjust the way we do things as the need arises.
I was fortunate to begin my term as Chair last year on the heels of the Members unanimously adopting a new organizational by-law, necessitated by the new Canada Not-for-Profit Corporations Act. This initiative was only the beginning of a process that saw the Canadian Red Cross secure its Articles of Continuation under the new law in late June, 2012, and develop a new governance framework. The framework was quickly and efficiently developed by staff and the Board, followed by a tremendous effort by volunteers to develop and adopt Rules of Practice within a single year.

It is worth noting that, according to the Canadian Bar Association, less than 5% of not-for-profit organizations have become fully compliant with the new law and now face the challenge of achieving compliance more than half way into the three-year deadline. Not only did the Red Cross achieve full compliance well in advance of that deadline, it has moved beyond that point to reform its processes at all levels.

We understand the need for dynamism for we know that Canada and the world are places of continual change. But in the face of that change, we also understand that stability, a strong corporate memory and continuity are of paramount importance to the Canadian Red Cross. Further, we recognize that this continuity must extend to our Board of Directors. This is no automatic achievement. At the end of last fiscal year, we welcomed nine new Board members, more than half of our panel, which necessitated intensive orientation sessions to ensure a broad understanding of how we operate and what challenges lie ahead for our organization.

The Board’s oversight role helps set the strategic direction of the organization. Ultimately, senior executives have the responsibility and authority to deliver on these strategies. Clearly, it is understood that the Board’s early involvement in assessing those plans adds true value by providing the oversight, the governance, the budgetary considerations and the serious second thought which help ensure the viability of those plans. I am extremely pleased by the very real sense of team evident throughout the Canadian Red Cross, nowhere more so than with staff and the Board as they consistently work together to implement reasoned and achievable programs with the absolute maximum impact and the absolute minimum of surprises.

As with so many things in life, good communication is a key to success and the path to understanding. It is a priority for me to ensure that Board members witness first-hand the results of their decision-making. Through their exposure to the day-to-day work of the Red Cross across Canada, Board members have gained pragmatic insight into the operational realities of our many and varied programs. In addition, several Board members have had the opportunity to observe our tremendous work in international contexts including Haiti where they saw the diligence, care and the sense of pride with which our delegates and the Haitian Red Cross are going about recovery and rebuilding.

Good governance is absolutely foundational to our success; it is the cornerstone of the trust we build and maintain with donors, with volunteers, with funding agencies, and with governments. This focus on fiscal and operational integrity contributed greatly to the signing of a strategic partnership for international humanitarian assistance with the federal government last year and finalizing the establishment of Red Cross Care Partners.

By any measure, 2012-13 was a year of outstanding achievement. However, such accomplishment also creates the obligation for all of us to clear this high bar every year. With the continuing commitment, discipline and conscientiousness of volunteers and staff, we intend to do just that.

Sincerely,

Alan Dean

Brief introduction to the Society

The Canadian Red Cross Society (the “Society”) is part of the largest humanitarian network in the world. It is a member of the Red Cross/Red Crescent Movement, which is comprised of the International Committee of the Red Cross, International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and 187 National Societies around the world. The Society operates across Canada and internationally, supported by both volunteers and staff comprising a total strength of almost 20,000 volunteers and staff in Canada alone. In Canada the mandate of the Society is carried out in five operational units (Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario, Western Canada and International Operations) and the head office in Ottawa.

Strategic focus

Strategy 2015, the Society's strategic plan, identifies six areas of excellence for services offered in Canada and internationally. They are:

i) disaster management,
ii) community resilience and capacity building,
iii) health and social programs,
iv) violence and abuse prevention,
v) injury prevention,
vi) humanitarian issues and International Humanitarian Law.

The Society’s finances are aligned to ensure that resources are allocated to support activities and operations that allow the Society to achieve its strategic goals and thus fulfill its mandate.

Results from operations

For the year ended March 31, 2013, the Society's excess of expenses over revenues was $9.4 million (2012 – revenues over expenses $0.6 million). These results from operations reflect a $2.4 million (2012 – $0.6 million) positive variance to budget.

2012-2013 has been a significant year for the Society. As one of its major activities, it offers important community health services in many provinces across Canada. On October 1, 2012, in response to emerging needs and funder expectations in Ontario, the personal support and home care services in that province merged with CarePartners, a nursing and therapy company, to form a new for-profit entity named Red Cross Care Partners (“RCCP”). The Canadian Red Cross maintains 50% ownership of RCCP. Additional costs were experienced due to the transfer of operations, however as an entity that offers personal support and home care as well as nursing and therapy, RCCP is now better positioned to take advantage of the expected changes in home care policy in Ontario, as well as better integrate services for clients. In addition, certain costs previously borne by the Society will now be part of RCCP.

In 2004/2005, following the Asian Earthquake and Tsunami, the Society experienced an outpouring of support from Canadians. The Society is committed to using all interest income earned from these donations, which to date amounts to $27 million, to continue recovery programming in countries affected by the tsunami. The interest income is recognized as revenue in the year earned and as an expense in the year that it is spent (see Note 12 of the Financial Statements), thus creating an operational deficit in the year spent. This year, the Society expended $6.4m of this interest on Tsunami related recovery programs. The other major recovery program underway is related to the 2010 earthquake in Haiti. Programming is focused on an integrated health program for communities in and around Jacmel, Haiti. Deferred revenue related to the Haiti appeal is $44 million (2012 -$60 million). Separate audited financial statements for both the Asian Earthquake and Tsunami Fund and the Haiti Earthquake Fund are available on the Society's website www.redcross.ca.
The Society has put an emphasis on fundraising to carry out its mission and mandate. With the goal of ensuring a sustainable long-term revenue base for the Society, additional resources have been added to the fundraising function in order to pursue the growth agenda. This year the Society experienced a shortfall against budget as it invested in new strategies, however, the Society is realizing year on year growth in this area - $48 million in revenue vs. $46 million in 2012. Cost of Fundraising data is disclosed with the Summary Financial Statements included in the Annual Report on page 19. The Society is continuing to develop and monitor this critical revenue area.

The Society is frequently the recipient of major unbudgeted donations. This year the Society received a particularly large anonymous donation of $4.2M to support our disaster management work in Canada, which is greatly appreciated.

Quality, Risk Management and Planning

The delivery of quality programs and services is central to the work of the Society. In addition to its own processes in this area, many of the Society’s programs have contractual obligations with funders that also require program reviews or audits.

Some of the Society’s operations have an inherent level of risk, in particular response to disasters in Canada and throughout the world. The risk management process is both national and international in scope with a focus on the identification, assessment and mitigation of risks associated with the achievement of the organization’s objectives. Principal risks are identified and evaluated relative to their potential impact and likelihood, including consideration of mitigating activities. Regular monitoring is conducted to identify potential and emerging risks arising from major strategic decisions, key initiatives and external factors. Major programs are monitored by executive management and any large transactions and non-budgeted expenditures over $2.5 million dollars are reviewed and approved by the Board of Directors. The Society is further developing risk management tools to enhance overall risk monitoring.

Annual program and operational unit planning to identify priorities and opportunities is aligned to the budgeting process. The Society has largely completed the first cycle of program and operational review and will now implement an integrated planning model with a rolling three year timeframe. Programs and support services will review strategy and program plans together under this model.

Looking forward

The Society is in a strong financial position and will continue to emphasize a high quality and sustainable approach to each of the programs and projects within our mission. The focus of “Strategy 2015” and the enhanced accountability framework are essential steps towards ensuring the continued progress towards operational objectives as well as a healthy and financially sustainable future.
